A number of curlers went out to Turnip Lake on Thursday afternoon in expectation of having a game, but unfortunately the thinness of the weather had rendered the ice too soft for play with the irons. There is some talk of taking out the Granite stones and celebrating St. Andrews day by having a number of matches. There is certainly a beautiful sheet of ice for the purpose and if the clerk of the weather only puts a chill on the atmosphere, a grand days play at the "rearing game" could be indulged in.

The threshers are at work all over the country but are not making very rapid head- way owing to the enormous bulk of straw. Oats and barley are turning out well the yields in many instances being greater even than was anticipated. Wheat is a heavy crop but a considerable portion of it is some- what damaged by frost, the wet weather at the end of the summer having retarded its ripening before the frost came. All that was cut before the rainy weather set in is a magnificent sample and will compare favorably with wheat grown in any part of Manitoba or the Northwest.

The Montreal Herald says of a shipment of Alberta cattle recently received at this city: "The last consignment of Northwest cattle, on route for the old land, arrived in this city on November 6th, and but a glance at them is sufficient to tell why the English market is always open to Canadian beef. Raised on the ranch and fed with the most nutritious food that can be grown, the cattle now present an appearance that must indeed be a cause of happiness on the part of the owner. The consignment consisted of 244 head. They were loaded at Calgary on October 28, and filled up all the space in four trains. They were from three to five years old and the manager of the ranch, J. Horron, says that when killed and ready for the butchers' stalls will average 1100 pounds in weight. The ranch is in Alberta, a district long famed for its excellent cattle-raising qual- ities."

The Globe in an article on Northwest politics says: "Either the Territories must be governed from Ottawa altogether or they must have responsible government in its control. A popular assembly will never be satisfied until it obtains all the powers which it sees enjoyed by the legislatures of the provinces. The authorities at Ottawa have gone too far in granting responsible govern- ment to recede, and it is likely that in the end victory will rest with the assembly."

H. M. S. Serpent was wrecked on the night of November 12th, twenty miles north of Cape Finisterre. Out of two hundred and seventy six persons on board only three were saved. It is stated that a number of men deserted from the ship previous to sail- ing and it is charged the ship was known to be unworthily by the admiralty. There is considerable excitement in England over the matter.

William Davies and William Hart, of the Leeward Islands, are endeavoring to work up trade between Canada and the Islands. DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY.

Mr. Tress, seconded by Mr. Neff, moved the address in reply. Although the leader of the advisory council had said that the speech from the throne had nothing in it, and desired to dismise it with a vote of thanks, the house had not treated it so curtly. They had gone carefully through it in the hope of finding something, but had been disappointed. The speech was notable for what it did not contain in regard to the present situation in the assembly and the intentions of the executive for the future. The address in reply did not touch some of the more important questions that should have been, but were not, mentioned in the speech as well as to the matters mentioned in it. The address in reply endorsed the speech where ever possible, but could not endorse it in certain particulars. In regard to the attempt at present being made at government by the minority the address in reply set forth the position of the majority, which position was backed by the majority of the people of the Territories. It had been announced by members of the advisory council that they had the support of the press of the Territories. They had the support of the subsidized press, the Regina Leader and Calgary Herald, whose opinions were paid for at a rate far above their value, and that was all. He alluded to the disallowance of Northwest ordinances at Ottawa, disallowance which was not instigated with a view to the welfare of the Territories, but rather to favor eastern interests. The interests of the Territories had not been properly advocated at Ottawa by members of parliament from the Northwest, or these disallowances and curt answers to memorials would not have occurred. The majority of the members of the assembly had entered upon a struggle against the usurpation of their rights by the majority. In taking this action their motives were challenged and themselves attempted to be held to scorn by the subsidized press. They were called agitators and the disruption of the country was threatened if they succeeded. He gave a quotation to show that agitators were necessary at times to correct abuses such as were attempted to be saddled upon the country in this case.

Mr. Tress regretted to find the mover of the address in reply ensuring him for having taken a certain position on the question of control of the finances, which was in accordance with the opinions he had always expressed on the subject, and which were in line with those of the mover of the address in reply two years ago. He accused the member of having shifted his ground in the hope of attaining office. He had always expressed himself against responsible government for the Territories, and his satisfaction with the present system. He had, by his resignation last year, given those who thought differently from him a chance to put their ideas in practice. They had not done so, and he was compelled to again come forward to the rescue of the country. If he could be shown a word or a line in the statute in law that his position was contrary to the law he would resign, but until he was and as long as he was satisfied with the position he would not resign and hand over control to those who appeared to recent course in the assembly so ill fitted to exercise it. They were given control of the finances by the act; they had the control, and would retain it whatever the majority might say, or whatever else they might throw upon himself and colleagues. He alluded to the member for Edmonton having changed his opinion on the temperance question. That member had voted two years ago to have that question submitted to the vote of the people of the Northwest, and had attacked him because he would not agree to it. He (the speaker) would be glad to submit this most important question to the direct vote of the people of the Northwest, and would abide by their decision.

Mr. Oliver said the personal allusion of the member for Prince Albert called for a reply, although he did not intend to speak at this time. That member had a few days ago asserted that he (the speaker) had changed his views on the temperance question, and now repeated it. The member for Prince Albert knew when he said so, then and now, that he was saying what was not a fact. The claim made by the member for Prince Albert that he had rescued the country by his recent taking of office was a sample of assurance so stuporous that it could only be illustrated by comparison. The story of the Irishman at the battle of Waterloo was answered. As the Duke of Wellington rode along the line before the battle commenced he halted and demanded of his staff, "Is Patrick Murphy present?" The answer came "He is." "Then," said the duke, "in the name of God let the battle begin." The fight in the assembly as set forth in the address in reply was simply for government by the majority. This right the members of the advisory council denied, and it was the part of the majority of the assembly to assert it. Control of the government meant control of the funds. The assembly was distinctly empowered to legislate on certain questions. With the control the majority legislation could be given effect; without that control it ceased to be a legislature, and became merely an advisory body. Had it been the intention of the parliament of Canada to make it merely an advisory body it would have so declared. The burden of legislative responsibility having been clearly placed upon the assembly, the majority demanded the control of the funds necessary to give their legislation effect. To deny them that much was to deny them their rights, and compel them to take even unpleasant means to vindicate those rights. The legislature had been distinctly empowered to tax the people of the Territories. It was not conceivable that it was intended that the executive should expend the funds so raised independent of the legislature, and yet that was the stand taken by the lieutenant-governor's advisers in the house. The total funds available to carry on the government of the Northwest was some $200,000. The sum was sufficiently large to make it important who should control it. The present advisers gave out on behalf of the house, the claim to the control of the far larger part of this amount, as a condition of taking office. It was their surrender of the rights of the house in this particular that set them their present impotence and brought upon them the hard measures which the house had adopted. They had made the surrender for the house, having been promised a share in the control for themselves, and now they defiantly told the house that they would resign. They controlled the finances and would retain that control in defiance of the house. The circumstances justified the house in taking the strongest measures in defence of its rights in this matter. The majority could fail in their duty to the people of the territories if they did not, as they were doing most emphatically, assert their undeniable right to control.

Mr. Seccord said that the position taken by the advisory council was strictly according to the law as it stood. They were made the objects of tyranny by the majority such as had never been exercised in any house of parliament in the world. Tyranny that would have its effect on the country as the tyranny of Speaker Reed in U. S. House of representatives had on the recent election in the United States, causing the defeat of the Republican party by a large majority. They had been challenged for holding office contrary to the wish of the majority. That lack of confidence had not yet been displayed in a proper manner. When the territorial estimates are brought down if they were received himself and colleagues would resign, but not until then. Their present position as to the control of finances was assured by the judgment of Sir John Thompson on the disallowance of the interpretation of law. It being said that it was not the case, the adjournment of the house, Mr. Seccord still having the floor.

Wednesday, November 12.

The house resumed its session yesterday.

evening at 7:30, Secord, of South Regina, having the floor. The debate was continued until 3:30 this morning. The speakers on the advisory side were Secord, Richardson, Reaman and Brett, and on the majority side were Thornburn, Neff, Turiff, Cayley, Hamilton, in Jelly, Sutherland, Davidson and Tweed, who, as mover, closed the debate. The arguments were chiefly a rehearsal of those already gone over. The advisory claiming that as the law stood they had earned the gratitude of the country by taking office, and doubly earned it by retaining it effectually in the face of a hostile majority. Indeed, it seemed the larger the majority and the greater the hostility the more the merit on their part, in holding on. They all announced their belief that they had had no control over the funds voted for expenses of government in the Northwest, and that to ask or demand such control was an outrage on common sense. They also announced their determination to retain control of the Territorial funds as long as the Lieutenant-governor pleased, whether the house pleased or not.

On the other side it was asserted that if the assembly did not control the federal fund it was on account of the greed for office on the part of the advisers, who snatched at the chance even at the price of sacrificing control of nine-tenths of the revenues of the Territorial government. Having committed this wrong they aggravated the offence by deliberately assuming control of the local funds, independently and in defiance of the assembly, backed only by the Lieutenant-governor, the Regina Leader and the Calgary Herald. If the assembly was to retain the semblance of a legislative body it was necessary that it should assert itself somewhere, or somehow, which it proceeded to do by pointing out to the advisers that no matter how superior to the house they might be in that respect, as members of it, they were subject to rules, and if they wished to coerce the rights of private members, must become such. Neff, of Mooseomin, made the hit of the evening by his witty exposures of the way in which the federal funds were squandered under the present, much vaunted system of irresponsible control. Messrs. Cayley and Hamilton gave clear and well-reasoned statements of the relations properly existing between the assembly and the advisory council, and also on the question of the several ordinances dissolved during the past year by the Ottawa authorities. As Mr. Hamilton put it, the ordinances were dissolved without due consideration of the facts, or of the interests of the people of the Territories.

An amendment moved for the purposes of obstruction by Secord, that the address in reply be considered clause by clause, was rejected by a vote of 15 to 6.

The vote on the motion to adopt the address in reply, was as follows: Yeas—Haxton, Thornburn, Neff, Sutherland, Tweed, Cayley, Lineham, Davidson, Hamilton, Oliver, Jelly, Turiff, Ross, Clinchell and Mitchell—15. Nays—Brett, Richardson, Betts, Secord, Reaman and Hoey—7.

GENERAL.

Herbert Ward is preparing an article for the Fortnightly Review which, it is stated, will be in the nature of a severe attack upon Stanley. Ward is warning under Stanley's intimation that he misused his opportunities with the expedition to feather his own nest, and will doubtless give Stanley all the shot he has in his locker.

According to a despatch from Australia Sir Samuel Griffith, prime minister of Queensland, has declared himself in favor of the establishment of an Australian nation, governed by an Australian parliament, with all powers now exercised by the parliament of Great Britain.

A Rome despatch says Capt. Casati's forthcoming book will contain sensational development in regard to Emili's career in Africa, showing in substance the equatorial province was a hotbed of vice and corruption and a Botany Bay for the worst characters of Egypt.

Advices from South Africa state the British government will not be content with its mere protectorate over Vito, but will establish a permanent settlement there. A reward of 10,000 rupees has been offered for the apprehension of Tuno Bokari, the fugitive Sultan of Vito, who instigated the murder of the German traders.

Hon. E. Dewdney, writing to an Ottawa friend, says much greater interest in Canadian affairs is being manifested by Englishmen since the McKinley bill became law and any temporary damage the measure may do to us will be amply repaid by its passage, bringing Canada so opportunely before the world.
